Eco Tips

If you'd like to work more sustainably, there is plenty you can do, even if you're currently working at the kitchen table or in the spare room.

Wherever your workspace is, these are just a few things that will make your day to day working practices that bit greener:

1. Let in light

Over winter you may have got into a habit of switching the lights on and keeping the curtains drawn, but if it's a sunny day, think again.

You can lower your lighting and heating bills and reduce CO<sup>2</sup> emissions just by opening your blinds and bringing natural light in.

Even when it's cool outside, sun shining through the windows will let heat in and provide natural warmth and light.

2. Be virtual

If you drive to meet people for work purposes, consider holding more catch-ups on Zoom or MS Teams.

Even one less face-to-face meeting a month could help you make big savings in mileage, vehicle emissions and time over a year.

You can make video and phone meetings easier, and block out external noise, by equipping yourself with a set of noise cancelling headphones.

3. Go to sleep

By letting your laptop or desktop PC go into sleep mode when you're away from your desk, you can save a lot of energy. A typical laptop<sup>1</sup> uses 15-60 watts of energy when in use but just two in sleep mode. A typical desktop uses 80-320 watts when in use, but just five to ten watts in sleep mode.

If your computer is not already set to go to sleep after a period of inactivity, adjust your settings so it can 'nod off' after a few minutes

4. Recycled, recyclable or refillable

With people in the UK throwing away around 295 billion pieces of plastic every year, your stationery does not need to be part of the problem.

When you purchase new supplies, check if these are 100% recycled or recyclable, or consider refillable notebooks, pens and pencils as these will also help you lower your carbon footprint.

Greener Cleaning

Is your cleaning helping
- or hindering - the fight against climate change?

While many of us are used to recycling our waste, re-using drinks bottles or printing responsibly, we can take things up a step by thinking eco when cleaning our workplaces and households. From the types of cleaning products we choose, to their contents, it is easier than ever to do the right thing and still achieve a sparkling finish.

Reduce plastic

Reducing the use of cleaning products in plastic packaging is a simple but necessary step.

Around 12.7 million tonnes of plastic<sup>1</sup> a year ends up in the ocean, and packaging is the biggest contributor to this plastic waste, with almost seven in ten plastic waste items (67%) coming from packaging.

One way you can reduce your single use packaging is with trigger bottles.

One example is the PVA Multipurpose Trigger Spray Bottle, designed for use with PVA Hygiene Multipurpose Cleaner Sachets. By placing a cleaner sachet in the bottle and filling with water, you have a 'new' bottle of cleaning product each time without using more plastic.

Bulk buy

If you frequently use particular products it is much better to buy these in bulk rather than piecemeal.

One order every few months will not only save money, but also create less packaging waste and transport pollution.

Think effectiveness

Choosing the best products for your needs, and using these efficiently, will reduce your product, packaging and energy use.

Good products that do the job well minimise waste because you don't need to apply extra product or run the dishwasher a second time. A choice that may seem like a bigger investment at first can often prove to be the greener and more economical option when you test it against cheaper alternatives.

Go easy with biocides

It's important to only use biocidal cleaning products where really needed.

Cleaning, washing or disinfectant products that include anti-microbial or anti-bacterial ingredients can kill many of the bad bacteria, but there are increasing numbers of bacteria that have adapted resistance to chemicals and antibiotics. So, go easy on the biocides wherever possible.
