A GUIDE TO...MYTH BUSTING

The Sanni Bin - a new and innovative product in the sanitary waste market.

It is cost effective, convenient, and environmentally friendly – allowing you to say goodbye to your existing expensive and unreliable feminine waste disposal services and say hello to a solution that's here to revolutionise your routine.

We understand though, change can be daunting.

Here's some myths, bust.

MYTH 1:

You cannot dispose of sanitary waste in general waste streams.

BUST

The Department of Health and The Health and Safety Executive are clear that sanitary waste is categorised as "offensive waste" and is not medical or clinical waste.

It is perfectly acceptable to dispose of up to 7kg of sanitary waste in the black bin collection.

To put this in context, it would take between 200 and 250 female staff on site to generate circa 7kg of sanitary waste per black bin collection.

MYTH 2:

Sanitary waste is classified as Offensive Waste.

BUST

Offensive waste produced in the workplace is very similar to the sort of waste produced in the household everyday, such as nappies and used sanitary products

It is unpleasant but doesn't pose a risk to public health or the environment.
This is clearly outlined on the www.gov.uk website, please scan the QR code to read more.

In this gov.uk document, it clearly states that if you have produced less than 7kg of municipal offensive waste, you can dispose of it in your black bag waste.
