SEND Spaces

Designing SEND (Special Educational Needs and Disabilities) spaces prioritises comfort, accessibility, and sensory needs, creating environments where all students can thrive. Thoughtful layouts with calm zones, open areas, and flexible furniture allow learners to move freely, regulate energy, and engage with activities at their own pace. These spaces reduce anxiety, support focus, and promote independence, ensuring students feel safe and included while participating in classroom learning.

Integrating adaptable, supportive furniture enhances these benefits. Wobble stools, one-piece chairs, and beanbags provide movement, stability, and calm, catering to diverse sensory and physical needs.

Creating effective STEAM spaces go beyond aesthetics – it’s about encouraging collaboration, creativity, and exploration. Flexible layouts with elevated work areas encourage movement, idea-sharing, and hands-on engagement with experiments and prototypes.

Ergonomic high seating ensures comfort and inclusivity, allowing all students to participate. Clear sight lines support smooth transitions between group projects, individual research, and hands-on challenges.

Designing for ICT spaces

Designing ICT suites with thoughtful layouts creates productive, engaging learning environments. Clear sight lines, organised workstations, and flexible arrangements allow students to move easily, collaborate, and access technology efficiently.

Well-planned spaces support focus during coding, digital design, or research, while enabling teachers to provide guidance and demonstrations effectively. Swivel stools and chairs enhance mobility and adaptability, letting students adjust posture, turn to collaborate, or shift between individual and group tasks without disruption.

By combining ergonomic, flexible seating with smart space planning, ICT suites encourage comfort, engagement, and teamwork, creating dynamic environments that support both independent learning and collaborative digital projects.
